

Every year the editor takes a holiday – whether deserved or not! This usually means that he is away at the time when he would assemble one issue of our newsletters. Hence we have a bumper edition to tide the reader over two months. This also means that he will be unable to attend the national conference in Torquay, so he hopes you will go yourself to the south coast's Riviera and witness this splendid event first hand. There is nothing better! So if you have not yet booked please either go onto the conference website or phone up and book your place now. Details in our diary section.

Special to this edition we are pleased to bring you a report on the recent Garden Party held by neighbouring Salisbury UKIP. As the editor could not go, John Butler of Poole UKIP, and author of their excellent newsletter, was able to do so and has penned this report for you, for which we thank him profusely:

The Salisbury Garden Party Lunch was well supported. Around 30 - 40 members, mainly from Salisbury and other Wiltshire branches, enjoyed a fine afternoon and an excellent cold buffet lunch, including some beautiful pavlovas made from locally picked raspberries. It was good to talk and 'network' a bit with some UKIP members outside of the County/Region and get some different perspectives on things. Jeremy Nieboer gave a very interesting speech, focusing on the abolition of the Regional Spatial Strategy (and with it the hated housing targets). Instead, Councils will be able to decide local housing issues on the basis of 'local evidence and needs'. Will this mean true local democracy again at last, or will it all end up as before, being driven by Whitehall? We will have to wait and see. Jeremy also talked about energy policy and the imminent threat to our supplies presented by Global Warming ideology. His solution is for UKIP to recommend two independent Royal Commissions; one to examine (objectively) the 'science' behind the debate; the second, to look at all alternative energy sources, including nuclear, with a view to a national plan to safeguard our energy supplies long term.

Deputy party Leader Viscount Monkton of Brenchley paid his first official visit to Bournemouth for a one day UKIP conference on the last Sunday of July. The event, organised by Christchurch UKIP featured speeches, amongst others, by Christchurch Chairman Rollo Reed who answered in a comprehensive fashion the oft-heard question on 'how would our trade and jobs suffer on leaving the EU?' – simply that they would not; and also John Myers who listed the things he could not believe about the EU; and Professor Tim Congdon CBE, UKIP's own economist also addressed the gathering. The conference was honoured to welcome UKIP's new Deputy Leader Viscount Monkton as a guest speaker. He emphasised that we would not lose trade and jobs by leaving the EU, and that the country's financial woes would virtually disappear overnight when we get out. See a section of his speech on YouTube through this link: <http://alturl.com/ftpyv>

As we were about to go to print the best news possible was announced. UKIP has effectively won its appeal against the Electoral Commission who had wanted to fine UKIP £349,216.00 in respect to Alan Bown's lapse from the electoral Register. The law had been intended to stop foreign businessmen and residents donating to UK political parties to win influence on policies etc. Lord Philips, the President of the seven judges of the Supreme Court of Appeal of the Westminster Magistrates Court, agreed with UKIP that the spirit of the law should not include people who were legitimate UK residents who were available to be on the electoral register. Alan Bown [right] had slipped off the register for several months before he realised his absence. UKIP were required to pay just £14,481.00, the amount that had been donated between the realisation of the error and Mr Bown's reinstatement on the register. Alan Bown commented on the result: "I am pleased and relieved that all this is over. We will now launch a massive UKIP membership drive, through a concerted leafleting campaign".

Lord Pearson, our Party Leader, added "We are delighted with the result. We can now concentrate on our job... working towards Britain leaving the European Union". Now the Sword of Damocles has been sheathed, it seems we have £334,735 presumably less legal fees to put towards that good cause.

It was good to see Nigel Farage's return to top form on BBC TV. The leader of the UKIP MEPs was on the panel of the last Questiontime of the season which was broadcast from Hartlepool. He received a warm response on all he said throughout the programme, confirming that Hartlepool is good UKIP territory. We certainly have a good record there.

Marta Andreasen has been applying considerable pressure on Spanish MEPs and government to change the ludicrous and heartbreaking policies of compulsory demolition of Spanish properties that have fallen foul of the recent property laws in Spain. The Coastal Laws are now under a full review with the expectation of a major overhaul. The Spanish Prime Minister José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero was livid about Marta's intervention, but despite that has ordered the review. Hundreds of British retirees face ruin if this law continues in the same form, in common with other retirees from all over Europe who have put their savings in these new properties.

The French Government boldly banned the wearing of the Burka and Niqab in public. True to form the weak British government, the Con-Dem alliance, rolled over and said through Immigration Minister Damian Green that the Burkas was 'empowering for women.' This is despite Belgium having a partial ban, with legislation currently passing through their parliament for a comprehensive ban and Turkey, Tunisia and Syria banning the full face Niqab from their Universities, schools, libraries & government buildings. No doubt this ruling will only encourage the hard-liner Muslims from France to emigrate to the Islamic Republic of Britain. We also saw an Imam on television argue that the Adhan, the Muslim call to prayer usually broadcast through loud speakers on their Mosques' minarets, is no more intrusive than the ringing of Church bells at 8am on Sundays, He omitted to mention that the Adhan is made 5 times a day including around 5am, seven days a week. That is 35 calls to prayer against the church bells peeling twice plus the odd practice, none being in the middle of the night. The government must wake up to the this creeping Islamisation of our country and put an end to it, before racial hatred becomes so stirred up that Enoch Powell's 'Rivers of Blood' become a reality. See this yourself with this clip from Skye news: <http://alturl.com/6tmzg>

From the beginning of July dotting parents and grandparents can photograph their little ones at school Sport's Days and school productions without fear of censure from Head teachers or Police. New guidelines have been issued by School's Commissioner David Smith, overruling the leftwing belief that the Data Protection Act prohibited this. At last some commonsense has prevailed.

However commonsense is seriously missing in the case of the Justice Secretary Kenneth Clarke's statement that short prison sentences don't work, attempting to justify his policy of sending less criminals to prison. As a UKIP spokesman says: "It would be unthinkable to cut shorter jail terms. It would be giving the drug addict shop-lifters a licence to steal at will to fund their habit. What Clarke seems to be ignoring is the fact that before a petty criminal is sent to prison, they will have been convicted many times over. So it is not the prison sentence that is failing them in the first instance, it is the very same community sentence he's pinning his hopes on, that has failed many times before the criminal is sent to prison. He is also being disingenuous about the UK crime figures. If you look at how many prison sentences are given per 1000 crimes, the UK has one of the lowest rates in Europe. This means that more of our crimes are being committed by fewer individuals – and those people should go to prison for longer, not be allowed to carry on as if they've done no wrong."

Our country's industrious globetrotting leader recently visited Turkey. Comrade Cameron said "When I think about what Turkey has done to defend Europe as a Nato ally, and what Turkey is doing today in Afghanistan, alongside our European allies, it makes me angry that your progress towards EU membership can be frustrated in the way it has been. My view is clear. I believe it is just wrong to say that Turkey can guard the camp but not be allowed to sit in the tent. So I will remain your strongest possible advocate for EU membership and greater influence at the top table of European diplomacy." So he is happy for the UK and the rest of the EU to allow another 80m immigrants into the club, risking further UK job losses for British people, and further Islamisation of the member states. How out of touch can a man be who is meant to be in charge of our country? One wonders what they teach their pupils at Eton nowadays. Certainly not history as the same person appears to think that we were the junior party to the USA forces in 1940 – when in fact they did not declare war until 8th December 1941. Nice of Obama not to point out his guest's mistake – very polite!

See Melanie Philip's take on Cameron: <http://alturl.com/i56xx>

The great power con continues despite the temporary demise of the Labour government. Chris Huhne of the left wing Liberal Party and coalition Energy Secretary believes that new measures will cost the average gas/electric account holder in the region of £300 a year to implement. Plans include 44,000 wind turbines as well as nuclear power [the latter being UKIP policy], being two of 32 measures announced. Customers are also expected to use less power as homes etc become more efficient.

The Western Morning News has increased its letter pages due to financial restraints. This is a marvellous opportunity for you to write to them with an increased chance of inclusion. Let's see if we can get published in every edition! Send them by email to this address: <http://www.thisiswesternmorningnews.co.uk/emaileditor.html> If you don't have email please write your letter and send to someone who has, so they can forward it on for you. The Chairman when not on holiday would be pleased to do this for you.

There were a series of District Council by-elections in July where UKIP had a presence. These are the results:

Kerry Smith – 15.5% (Basildon Council, Nethermayne ward)
Jen Walsh – 10.5% (Torbay Council, St. Mary's & Summercombe ward)
Leon Stedman - 9.5% (Babergh Council, Great Conrad North ward)
David Fairweather – 6.9% (Cherwell Council, Kidlington North ward)
Josephine Evans – 4.2% (Corfe Mullen South ward).

This month in a longer than usual piece reflecting the two month run of this newsletter, Jeremy Nieboer discusses two of the major issues facing this country at the moment - planning reforms and the cost of energy:

"The Con-Dem coalition has been prompt to announce some fundamental reforms touching on the key issues of EU Regionalisation and also on the democratic process as it applies to planning decisions.

As you will know the EU has used the policy of government through the regions as a means of by-passing elected national parliaments and administrations and extending dependence on the EU politburo. It has done this through the Committee of the Regions and by the use of the so called Cohesion Fund and also the Regional Development Fund. I understand that we get £100 for every £260 of our money under this system. This is intended by the Commission to extend EU competence and to deepen 'integration' by depleting national governments of authority in key areas particularly in over planning since control over land use confers economic power. Through the Regional Policy Commissioner, the EU Economic and Social Committee, the UK Regional Spatial Strategy and UK Regional Development Authorities the EU is able to guide UK policies on housing and infrastructure projects to ensure that they are in line with EU Commission objectives. These have increasingly been imposed on local planning authorities without any democratic oversight or enquiry.

It is therefore welcome news that the coalition is to 'restore to neighbourhoods power to determine the shape of places in which their inhabitants live' by abolishing the entire bureaucratic and undemocratic tier of regional planning, including the Regional Spatial Strategy and all regional building targets. The coalition has announced that it will end all Regional Planning Guidance and abolish the Regional Development Agencies. The Infrastructure Planning Commission (IPC) is to be abolished and replaced by a unit in the Planning Inspectorate. All major infrastructure project decisions now have to involve full consultation with local communities. To give momentum to these policies a Minister for Decentralisation has been appointed.

However, whilst all this is most heartening there remains the crucial and urgent question of how we are to provide for our national energy needs and in particular how we are to generate sufficient power to serve the needs of industry and of consumers. Before its abolition the IPC had 15 wind turbine and 4 nuclear power generation projects to consider - it did not in fact deal with any project during its existence. Decisions are urgently needed on these but must not be made other than in the service of an energy policy based on scientific reality and the overwhelming need to provide politically secure long term energy generation with consistent affordable and stable pricing.

The greatest threat to our long term prosperity and economic stability is now the withering ineptitude of the former Labour government to provide a secure and stable supply of power for the country's needs. The essential issues as to energy policy have been skewed and obscured by an irrational obsession with the question of CO2 emissions and their supposed impact on global temperature. The consequences of this obsession are very grave. They involve the crippling of manufacturing industry and a colossal burden of what is in truth additional taxation of our industrial base and of the consumer.

The cost of complying with the EU and UK climate change legislation, levies, targets, subsidies and emission restrictions is truly fantastic. The appalling financial predicament into which industry and the consumer have been placed by this obsession has now been analysed in a recent publication "British Energy Policy and the Threat to Manufacturing Industry" (Ruth Lea and Jeremy Nicholson: Civitas). The Department of Energy and Climate Change itself computes that by 2020 the aggregate cost to industry of these financial burdens will be an additional 70% minimum of the current of energy cost (disregarding inflation).

No manufacturing concern can bear these costs and remain competitive. Industry requires stable and consistent energy prices since for major manufacturing entities (particularly in chemicals, steel, glass, paper, industrial gases, aluminium and cement production) energy costs are the most critical potential variable. I should add that for the consumer the DECC puts the aggregate increase in energy costs at a minimum of 33%. Such figures are almost certainly underestimates.

The consequence of all this is that such industries will migrate to other jurisdictions where they can effectively compete in global markets. Indeed this is already happening. There is also no doubt that foreign inward investment will fall significantly and that unemployment will become an endemic and insoluble problem to an extent that will further accelerate our economic decline.

Nor is the cost of energy the only tsunami that is going to overwhelm us unless we act immediately. If we do not invest immediately in new generation nuclear power stations and/or coal or fired power stations there is no possibility of our providing from our own resources for the energy shortfall that will occur when the present generation of nuclear and coal powered power stations become decommissioned. All but one of our nuclear power stations were built over 30 years ago and will need to be closed within the next 10 years. Our existing larger coal and oil fired powers stations are due to close in the next 5 years under the EU's 'Large Combustion Plants' directive. The sombre fact is that, as John Hutton, the then energy minister, stated to the Labour Party conference in August 2008 - in a rare moment of objective honesty - "no coal and no nuclear means no power, no future". 2 weeks later he was removed from office.

It must be understood that the shortfall in energy supplies will be far greater than in any other period of modern history - it will be of the order of 40% at times of peak demand. Severe cuts in power are certain to occur unless an immediate decision is made to go forward with new hydrocarbon and/or nuclear fuelled power station construction. Any decision to commit us further to oil or gas exposes us to the risk of geo-political constraints not least those that may be imposed by Russia and the Middle East.

There is no possibility whatsoever of the energy shortfall being met by wind or tidal power and I will deal with this more fully in the next newsletter. May I just conclude this contribution to the newsletter by stating what must be obvious to any detached observer - namely that our country has been led into a wholly unreal and fantasy world in which language is drained of all meaning and where rational enquiry and decision has been paralysed by the curse of wishful thinking. Unless those by whom we are governed have the courage to see and act on the true realities we will all pay a terrible price to an extent that exceeds by far the constraints that the appalling mismanagement of our affairs by Blair/Brown are now beginning to impose on us."

'What the media is saying':

- The FT notes that research by the Economist Intelligence Unit commissioned by RBC Capital Markets reveals that world business leaders see a growing risk that the eurozone could break up in the next three years. Half of the 440 chief executives and heads of banks questioned say there is a greater than 50 percent chance of one or more countries leaving the eurozone by 2013. More than a third (36 percent) see at least a 25 percent chance of a complete breakup over the same period. Germany is perceived as the fifth most likely country to pull out, which the article notes may reflect the respondents' concern that Berlin may lose confidence in monetary union if the crisis continues.
- The eureferendum.blogspot.com shows that, in the space of two years, the British Council has spent more than £3.5 million of British taxpayers' money on climate change propaganda – according to information released under the Freedom of Information Act. It has been spent on recruiting young people in 60 countries to pressurise world leaders to "take action on climate change". This included funding groups to attend the December Copenhagen summit in order to take part in demonstrations. Founded in 1934 to promote Britain's international cultural relations, and funded heavily by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), this body until recently chaired by Lord Kinnock has become one of Britain's lead bodies overseas, in promoting the climate change agenda.

- As reported in the Telegraph, Britain's military will be made smaller, lighter and more dependent on foreign allies as budget cuts hit defence according to the Armed Forces minister. Nick Harvey, a Liberal Democrat, said that while the Forces needed to maintain the ability to "apply lethal force", Cold War models of large standing armies were no longer relevant. He said the military had to become more agile and adaptable; more mobile; better integrated; and better merged with "other levels of national power and influence, at home and abroad". Some experts and officers believe such a move threatens Britain's independence and could leave the country unable to defend itself if forced to fight alone.
- Both the Mail and Telegraph report that the EU has fined Britain more than £150 million for failing to display the EU flag as part of EU funded projects. The fines relate to the £3.8 billion given to the UK by the European Regional Development Fund, which has strict rules on the display of the EU flag on any project accepting cash.
- The multi-million pound battle to kick hate preacher Abu Hamza out of Britain has descended into farce. Ten human rights judges suspended his extradition to face terror charges in the United States on the grounds that the Americans might jail him for "too long." The extraordinary decision will cause more delays to the scandalous extradition saga which has so far lasted more than six years. As reported in the Express.
- The Express also makes it clear that nearly one million new Eastern European migrants could arrive in Britain due to a loophole in EU law. Citizens of the former Soviet republic of Moldova have been granted rights to live and work here and in the EU by neighbours Romania. More than 120,000 already have Romanian passports and 800,000 are understood to have applied. UKIP Leading Spokesman Nigel Farage said: "Any pretence that Britain can control its borders, or that immigration can be contained while we stay in the European Union is destroyed by this revelation."
- The Telegraph reports that the cost of privately educating children of EU officials will increase by 12.5 percent to £147 million over the next year. EU civil servants, or diplomats, are entitled to free schooling in 14 taxpayer funded 'European schools' as an entitlement alongside generous pay and pensions. By 2013, the school bill will increase by 24 percent to £163 million, meaning that in three years time British taxpayers will be paying an annual £22 million contribution to the private schooling of EU officials' children.
- Following the Commission's announcement that it will increase its research and development budget, Handelsblatt carries the headline "EU projects are running out of control". The article notes that various high-tech projects are running over budget, including the EU's satellite navigation system, Galileo, which will need €2.5 billion more on top of its current budget of €3.4 billion euro.
- An El Mundo blog piece by UKIP MEP Marta Andreasen questions why the EU's budget continues to rise when national budgets are being slashed.
