

We are at an important time for UKIP. The choice of a new leader has been made and the result will be made known by the 6th November. We make the plea that we all must stand behind whoever has been elected. There is no room for discord. Remember the maxim first used by Aesop, 'United we stand, divided we fall'. Discord is the EU's work.

On the subject of elections, the District Elections next May beckon. Let's get ready well in advance and have candidates in place by the end of 2010 – The party needs candidates in every ward. To do that we must find 33 candidates. This means we need half the membership of Dorset North to stand for local seats! Paper or real, the latter preferred, we need to give voters the chance to choose us – no candidate in a ward means disenfranchised UKIP voters. People must get used to seeing UKIP on every voting slip at every level that they come across. Last time we had 13 D.C. candidates in Dorset North. It would be wonderful if we can build on that amazing record. Please don't wait to be asked – tell John Baxter straight away. We also need to have more town and parish councillors. You may find these positions unopposed. An ideal training ground for those wishing to go further in local politics, or for those wishing to help local communities in a less demanding way, perhaps as a retirement interest. Whichever, they all help the UKIP cause.

We are still offering a free membership for their first year [officially £1] for completely new members. No excuse for neighbours, friends and relatives not to get involved with UKIP, and to find out what is happening to their country for real. Maybe someone who is currently not a member might like to stand as a candidate? Simple arithmetic from a simple editor - If every member finds one new member we will double our membership! Obvious I know but true.

The Dorset branches under the capable leadership of Diana Butler [middle photo] organised a Table Top Sale, as well you know because you were there, weren't you?! Members had been busy finding bric a brac and books, growing plants, and spending hours slaving in their kitchens making cakes and breads of all descriptions. The cafe area was constantly busy with teas and portions of cakes and homemade biscuits. The amount raised for the Dorset and Somerset Air Ambulance was an amazing £153.95 net of the Pimperne Village Hall rental. Nearly £30 of UKIP merchandise was also sold helping Dorset North branch funds. Congratulations to all concerned. The photos show the beginning of the packing away just after the select crowd had left.

The Bonfire & the Viscount Monckton evenings both take place this month. Do please get to at least one of these events and make them successful. It is down to you! If they are not successful then we are wasting our time arranging them. We can take one or 2 more for the bonfire night but Christchurch UKIP need to fill the Priory Hall and that takes 100 people at least. It is a super way to help your party & get to see an internationally known & respected figure face to face – answering your questions. Currently he is co-Deputy Leader of UKIP. Incidentally his sister Rosa, a close friend of Princess Diana, appeared on BBC TV recently sympathetically hosting a program called Tormented Lives in which she exposed the reality of life for people with learning disabilities in this country. One of those featured lives in Poole.

At a time when we are tightening our belts and battening down the hatches against a growing storm and avalanche of government cuts and increases in taxation, you might like to know that the Dorset North Conservative MP Robert Walter voted in favour of not reducing the EU's budget increase. In this he kept the company of B'm West MP Burns O'Connor & B'm East MP Tobias Ellwood. Clearly they are not looking after the interests of their constituents – or their country.

As is well known, the European Parliament had voted to increase the EU budget by 5.9% to €130bn on the same day that Chancellor George Osborne announced huge spending cuts in the UK. The EP's proposed budget increase for 2011 would increase the UK's gross contribution to the EU budget by over £840m. Although Cameron apparently got this reduced to £2.9m, (the figure claimed to have been agreed in advance by Labour!) the Telegraph notes that included in MEPs' demands is a staffing increase of 388 posts to the civil service to assist their work. On top of that, more money is also set aside for an additional £32,000 a year towards new MEP assistants or pay rises for existing researchers who can earn up to £80,000 a year. This shows how seriously out of touch MEPs are with reality and how naive or deceitful our PM is.

Young Independence Chairman Michael Heaver [left] claims that the number of British-born students accepted at British Universities has gone down thanks to the influx of students from new EU countries. "Of course we welcome foreign students at our Universities and we want our own young people to be able to study abroad," said Heaver. "But the fact that EU students are entitled to the same government loans as British students has contributed towards a record one-third of British students, over 200,000 young people, being rejected for degree courses. All foreign students who wish to come and study in the UK should be given the same rights and opportunities. Why should a student from Romania get preference to study in our country compared to a student from Nigeria or America?"

On the subject of Young Independence, the South West has a keen new YI leader in Daryl Stanbury. Daryl says "The SWYI movement is bigger than first thought and ... we intend to get ourselves out there and be seen DOING things." We look forward to hearing what initiatives Daryl and his colleagues have up their sleeves, and wish them every success. We are sure there is a wealth of talent amongst the South West's under 35s. If you are under 35 please contact Daryl as membership records at head office do not show ages. Contact details in 'Helpful Contact Information' below.

A German entrepreneur is bypassing an EU ban on light bulbs of more than 60 watts by marketing his own brand as mini heaters. Siegfried Rotthaeuser and his brother-in-law have come up with a legal way of importing and distributing 75 and 100 watt light bulbs – by producing them in China, importing them as "small heating devices" and selling them as "heatballs." Rotthaeuser studied EU legislation and realised that because the inefficient old bulbs produce more warmth than light -- he calculated heat makes up 95 % of their output, and light just 5 % -- they could be sold legally as heaters. Full marks to them – always good to see the EU being outsmarted. Hopefully the sales of the terrible low wattage bulb will tumble, thus saving landfill [as that is where most of them surely will end up] and nature's chain the poisoning effects of Mercury.

This month Jeremy Nieboer has written a fascinating piece on the historical origins of the EU.

I have recently been giving talks and taking part in debates at the behest of Civitas, a respected policy body and think tank and one of the questions that I am asked is 'How did the EU come into being?'

The narrative of the origins of the EU reveals that it was an idea which, when realised, was one whose time had already past and which was only given life so that the French government could avoid a confrontation with the US Secretary of State Dean Acheson. It is worthwhile recalling the events of 1949 – 1950 since they put into sharp focus three things: the fact that it was political expediency that gave birth to the project and not a mystical conception to prevent war in Europe; the deception that has from its origins attended the growth of the EU and the fundamental flaw of the entire project namely the absence of the democratic principle.

The project has its origins in the work of a few governmental officials following the First World War including Louis Loucheur, Jean Monnet and Arthur Salter. Loucheur was given very wide powers by the French government in 1916 to reconstitute France's industry which had lost most of its coal and steel production in the north east when overrun by the Germans. The shock of the appalling French losses at Verdun in that year was so severe that it dominated French foreign policy for 2 generations. Loucheur concluded that coal and steel production was the vital condition for waging war and if control of these engines of war were vested in a higher authority peace might be preserved. He became chief economic adviser to Clemenceau at the Treaty of Versailles and proposed integrating French and German coal and steel resources. Monnet and Salter were senior officials in the League of Nations and the Reparations Commission both created at Versailles. These two advanced the ideas of Loucheur by advocating the creation of a United States of Europe with a commission (Secretariat), Council of Ministers, Assembly and Court of Justice. These institutions would be supranational and would not be accountable to any nation or national institution.

These ideas failed to achieve realisation due both to the resistance of French industrialists and also by reason of another form of 'new order' in Europe imposed by Hitler. It is however a fact that must always be remembered that the EU project was born out of the First World War and was not in truth the product of fear of any new war arising as a result of the Second World War. By 1949 German recovery had exceeded the expectations of the Allied powers – in particular the US which had largely been the author of this economic success by its Marshall Plan. Britain and the US wished to see Germany achieve economic success and nationhood taking a leading role in Europe. France however resisted all steps that would lead to such an outcome and wished to secure control over German coal and steel production. By March 1950 French obstruction compelled the US to demand that by 11 May 1950 (the date of a Foreign Ministers meeting) a plan for German economic development must be in place or it would impose one.

The French Foreign Minister Schuman then seized upon the Monnet plan to pool coal and steel resources under the supranational institutions he had proposed – brought out and polished for the occasion – as a means of placating Dean Acheson the US Secretary of State. Monnet procured that Schuman was handed his plan memorandum at Gare L'Est when going to Metz for the weekend. By the time he got back to Paris, although Bidault the French Prime Minister was not in favour of the plan, Schuman had determined that it be adopted without any discussion or consideration by the French cabinet. Only 3 or 4 ministers had even any knowledge of it before Schuman announced it to the media on 9 May 1950. The British government had only been sent a short summary of the plan a few hours beforehand and only learned of the substance of the plan from the French radio broadcast. Adenauer for West Germany had no alternative politically but to accept.

Two enduring facts were obvious to all – Churchill in particular. The dominant fact was that the danger to world peace arose from the hostility of the Soviet Union to the West. No less obvious was the fact that the effect on the minds of its people of the entire destruction of most its major cities and the total occupation of its land by the Allied powers (neither of which had occurred in 1918) meant that Germany would not be a threat to peace at least for many generations. It was not this that gave birth to the EU but the dead of Verdun and the Somme.

I will just conclude with the words of Clement Attlee, the then Prime Minister, on the nature of the European Coal and Steel Community that led directly to the Treaty of Rome:-

Britain could not accept that “the most vital economic forces of this country should be handed over to an authority that is utterly undemocratic and is responsible to nobody.” JCSN.

‘What the media is saying’:

- Writing in the Daily Mail, Steve Daughy says the number of foreigners working in Britain has hit an all-time high of 2.4m despite the fragile state of the recovery, an increase of 1m in 7 years. Eastern Europeans number 551,000. By contrast there are now 26.53m Britons in jobs, around 650,000 down from the peak in the summer of 2008.
- The European Parliament has voted to extend the European Commission's proposals on maternity leave to 20 weeks on full pay. An internal European Parliament impact assessment estimates that the cost of the changes to the UK will be €3bn (£2.5bn) per annum. The BBC quotes a UK Department for Business spokesman saying, "We know other member states share our concerns about the real costs of this directive". EL Mundo reports that the move will cost the Spanish economy between €284m and €988m, while Handelsblatt reports estimated extra costs of €1.5bn to the German economy.
- The Sunday Times reported that Lord Mandelson has channelled fees and royalties from his recent autobiography into a private company, enabling him to qualify for up to half his former salary as a European Commissioner two years after leaving the job. His book royalties and speaking engagement fees (estimated at £350,000) are paid to Willbury, his firm. This enables him to claim up to £104,000 a year, intended to cushion former Commissioners while they look for new work. By paying his earnings into a company of which he is a director, he can tell the Commission he has no other private income.
- The Sunday Telegraph reported that there are over 41,000 children who are currently awarded UK child benefit, according to EU rules, despite living in other EU member states. Under EU rules, child benefit is paid to parents who work and pay tax in the UK, even if their children live in other countries.
